Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies

BULLETIN No. 14

ARRANGEMENTS are well under way for the weekly circle Trail Rides referred to in our last bulletin. These will be under the auspices of the Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies and under the direction of Colonel Phil. A. Moore, from Banff and Lake Louise, commencing July 7th and continuing during July and August. The Banff ride will last four days and take in Camps at Stoney Creek, Sawback Lakes and Mystic Lake, at each of which points there is good trout fishing. Trail Riders must bring their own sleeping bags and blankets. Rates will be $10.00 a day. The Lake Louise ride will be round the Bungalow Camps and Rest Houses, including Wapta, Lake O'Hara, a new camp on the McArthur Creek, Emerald Lake, Yoho Bungalow Camp and Twin Falls Rest House, motoring from Field back to Lake Louise. This circle Trail Ride will last six days, the nights being spent at the Bungalow Camps where available. Rates will probably be $10.00 a day, except where night is spent at Emerald Lake Chalet, when the rate for day will be $12.00.

In order to make these Circle Trail Rides possible, the Commissioner of Parks has given the Trail Riders permission to erect cabins at Stoney Creek, Sawback Lakes, Mystic Lake and McArthur Creek. These cabins will be available only to organized parties of Trail Riders, the guides in charge of which will receive keys from Colonel Phil. A. Moore and be responsible for leaving in the same condition as when entered. These cabins will be supplemented as required with teepees. Arrangements have been made to erect the cabins as soon as the snow disappears. All reservations for these Circle Trail Rides must be made to Colonel Phil. A. Moore, Chateau Lake Louise, Alberta.

FOUR-DAY CIRCLE TRIP FROM BANFF

Entering a narrow portal in the spruce and pine on the roadside, seven miles from Banff, the swinging pack train leaves every sign of civilization, save a grass overgrown tote road, followed for two and a half miles to Cascade River.

Mount Aylmer towers to the right, to a blunt mitre-like peak, 10,375 feet in altitude, dwarfing its fellows, which range only to a little over 9,000 feet.

After four and a half hours in the saddle, fording the Cascade River many times as it winds about along the Cascade Range of rugged peaks, the trail riders reach the junction of Stoney Creek and the river shortly after noon for the first camp.

The trip continues along the Cascade Range, through a country alive with sheep, deer, elk and harmless black bear.

Fording the stream a number of times and passing the junction of Cascade River and Cuthead Creek, brings the pack train to Flint Camp, at the junction of the river and Sawback Creek.

From there it is two and a half hours to Sawback Lake Camp, at the junction of a small creek draining Sawback Lake and Sawback Creek. Sawback Lake, a lake draining a well-wooded valley by half a dozen small streams, fed by a glacier nearby, is teeming with Cutthroat and Rainbow Trout to five pounds in weight.

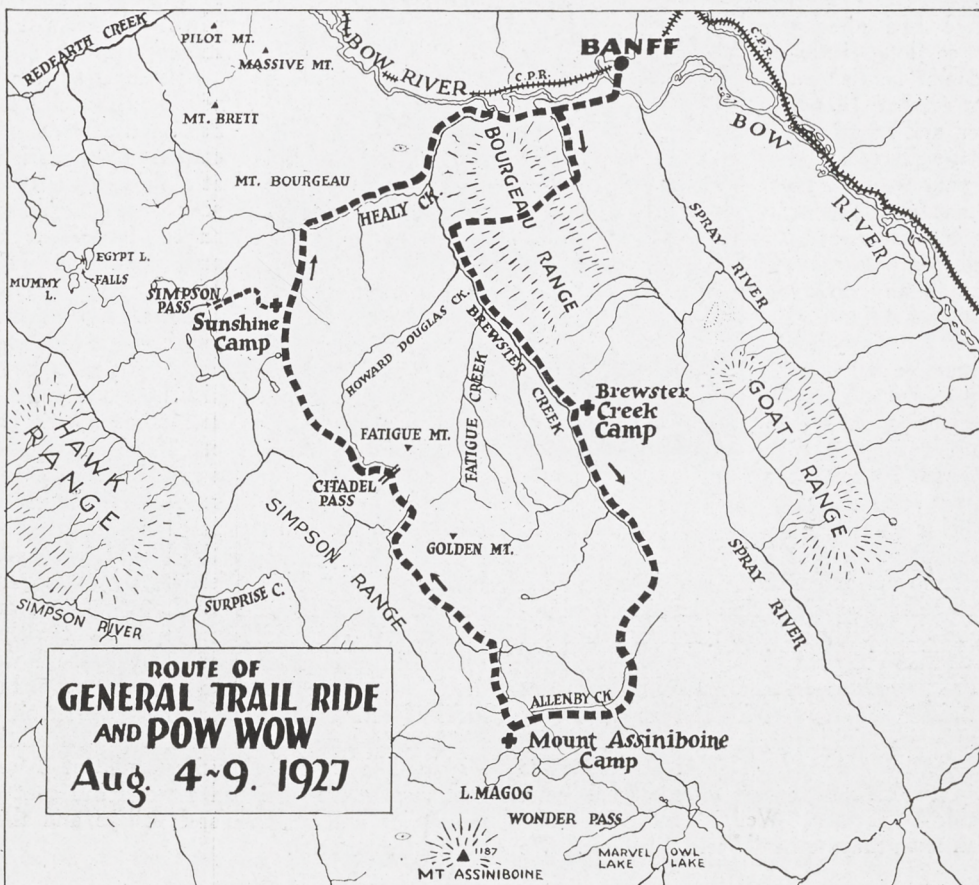

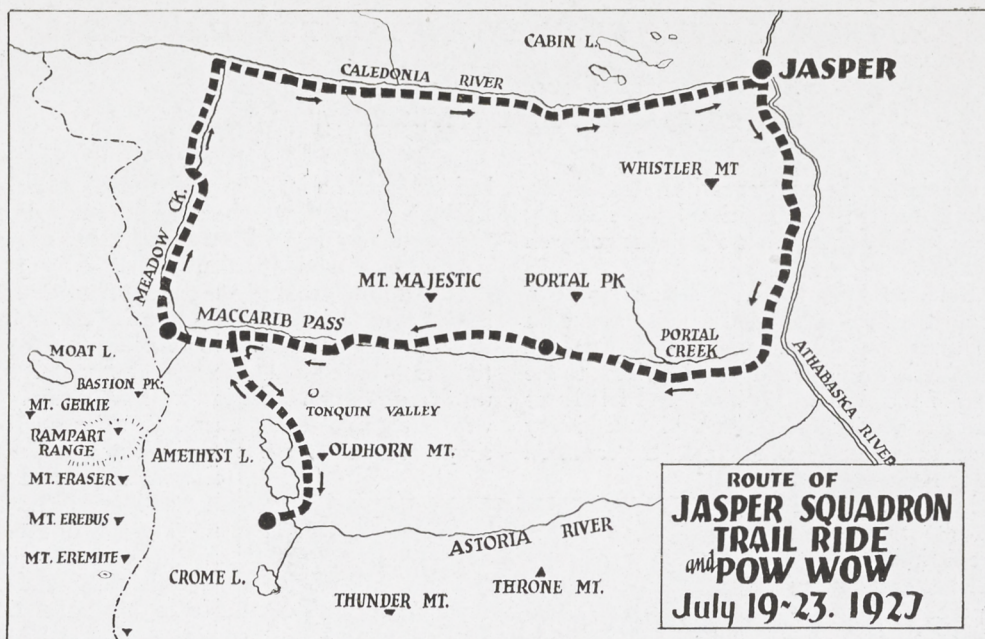

After climbing fifteen hundred feet through a well-timbered valley to the top of Fortymile Summit, the trail dips into the valley of the Fortymile Creek, a creek flanked on each side by meadow land, on which deer and mountain sheep graze.

After three hours in the saddle on the fourth day, following the trail along Fortymile Creek, and crossing Edith Pass, at the foot of the needle-like peaks of Mount Edith and Mount Louis, a gradual descent through timbered slopes brings the trail riders to the motor road, three miles from Banff.

By MARY SCHAEFFER WARREN

It was during the summer of 1903 that, sitting calmly in the chalet at Glacier, I was suddenly aroused to a most emphatic statement going on behind me.

Out of abstraction I heard a fist coming down hard on the hotel desk, and a voice saying "I mean to see my grave." Turning, I beheld a short, elderly man laying down his opinion to the hostess of the chalet. Instinctively I felt I was listening to a voice that might hold some history of the country through which passes the Canadian Pacific Railway and quietly slid where I could get more than where sitting.

Our hostess knowing my penchant for anything or anyone connected with a road on which I had already lived so long, introduced me: "This is Mrs. Schaffer, Sir James Hector, and I think she is pretty well acquainted with your work." To hear that famous name so unexpectedly was as a bomb from a clear sky. I was only an ordinary tourist at that time and did not have an idea that hundreds all along the line of the C.P.R. were waiting for his coming. He might have been about 70 at that time, but so many had been his hardships that one could but guess at his age. Later it seemed a mockery that one who had done so little at that time in the mountains was to be the only mountaineer of Canada to meet him.

Very interestedly I asked him what he meant by looking for his grave, for at that time, very few of us had had any entree to that wonderful book—Palliser's Report. The old gentleman was most agreeable and seemed to enjoy a listener. He said: "My grave? Well, it's somewhere near a small town they now call Field, I believe. We had done quite a lot of exploring previously and I think we were about where the present town of Calgary is now located. We were being closely watched by a band of Indians of that section and they had firmly told us we should go no farther into the mountains as it would be disturbing their hunting grounds. Our expedition seemed to be coming to a sad close, when, fortunately for us, dysentery broke out in the Indian camp. I was able to go among them, give them a few simple remedies, move their camp, and the disease disappeared as fast as it had come. It all helped wonderfully in a change of mind regarding our Indian friends and in a few days two expeditions to the westward were planned with the Indians as guides.

"I went over what is now known as Vermilion Pass and after a circuitous route arrived at a turbulent stream near the Columbia River. I decided to make my way eastward by this same stream. I had a most uncomfortable horse whose one desire seemed to be to kick. At one point it was necessary to put our horses across this brawling, roaring stream, but my horse refused to go, and forgetting all about his heels,

I took a stick to him. Fortunately I was quite close to him or I would not be telling my story to-day. As it was, he gave me such a blow that I fell flat and my companions thought I was dead. They proceeded to dig my grave, but luckily for me I revived before being buried alive. This accident caused the stream to be named the Kicking-Horse. I feel quite confident I can find that hole." We had a wonderful chat of mountains and streams and valleys and then parted temporarily.

A SHORT SYNOPSIS OF THE WORK OF THE PALLISER EXPEDITION

Captain John Palliser was sent to Canada by the Colonial Office of Great Britain in 1857 to 1860 with the object of locating a route within the confines of Canada proper. In his party were four men, of whom Dr. Hector was undoubtedly the most moving spirit.

Making Edmonton their headquarters, they debarked from the Great Lakes and made their way overland with carts and saddle-horses, arriving at Fort Edmonton Dec. 30th, 1857. They left Edmonton Jan. 9th and arrived at Rocky Mountain House Jan. 14th. They returned to Edmonton Jan. 30th.

The first view of the Rocky Mountains was on July 23rd. On Aug. 7th the party was able to drag its carts as far as Bow Fort, where they had to be abandoned.

On Aug. 11th, with packs the party started up the Bow Valley, camping for a night under the group of mountains now known as the Three Sisters, then went on to make camp under the shadow of Cascade Mountain. (Sir James told me privately he had climbed that mountain to see if he could locate a future trail.)

He crossed the Vermilion Summit on Aug. 20th. On Aug. 24th they reached the Kootenai Crossing. Crossed the summit of the Kootenai Aug. 27th and started down the Beaverfoot River. They halted at a river which had its rise in a large glacier to the northeast and now known as Ice River. On Aug. 29th Sir James mentions in his notes of reaching a large stream with a fine fall of forty feet and which later circumstances caused him to call the Kicking Horse River.

Evidently he camped somewhere opposite the site of Leancoil on the C.P.R. line. On Sept. 2nd his party reached the highest point of land where now stands his monument erected later by the mountaineers of the world. Following up the river now known as the Bow, Hector reached the Saskatchewan via Bear Creek. Here he probably camped, explored Glacier Lake, went a few miles up the Northern Saskatchewan, then down to the Kootenai Plains and came to what he called Wapekielck, or Cline's Creek.

Oct. 7th found him and his party back at Edmonton, where later he met Palliser. He seems to have been ever indefatigable, for his notes tell us that on Jan. 12th, 1859, he started for Jasper House on the Athabaska, this being a trading post of the Hudson's Bay Co. On the 16th he reached the old, deserted post of Fort Assiniboine and on Jan. 31st arrived at Jasper House at 10 p.m., this place being at that time under the direction of Mr. Moberly. From here he took a short trip up the main Athabaska, but owing to an accident to one of his men, got no farther than 30 miles.

In February he started to return to Edmonton though taking continuous trips all over the prairie districts.

In February, Hector is found somewhere among the Cypress hills and reached Bow River on Aug. 6th, and was at old Bow Fort on the 8th, just a year and a day later than the previous year. Later he again ascended the Bow River to what he calls Pipe Creek, or what is now known as the Pipestone. From there he followed Pipe Creek and camped under Mount Molar (his own naming).

He crossed the Pipe Summit on Aug. 27th. Passing down the Siffleur River, he reached the Saskatchewan and eventually camped at what he called Pine Point, at the present time known as the Whirlpool.

From there he followed up the middle fork of the Saskatchewan and pitched camp opposite Mount Forbes on Sept. 3rd. On Sept. 7th he crossed Howes Pass, via the Blaeberry, and reached the Columbia River on Sept. 17th. On Oct. 2nd he found his party at the source of the Columbia River, a mere halt, and passing Port Colville, joined Captain Palliser. They journeyed together down the Columbia River to the Pacific coast.
